

John's Journey - Day 16

April 16, 2009

Brinkley, AR to Clarendon, AR

I left Brinkley this morning about the same time. I've got my routine down quite well by now. We had a very beautiful ride today. The mules are doing fine. Brit is working real hard as well, she rests quite easily during the day & she patrols the campsite each night.

I stopped in Clarendon this afternoon & filled my gas bottle. While there, I spoke to some police officers. We were discussing a very narrow stretch of bridges that covered about 4 miles. They were concerned & asked how long it would take me to cross. I told them about an hour. They quickly replied that they could not shut it down completely that long. So they asked me to wait until morning before I moved on.

They told me about an RV park just outside of town & that's where we parked for the night. Unfortunately there was no store or anything there, but it was definitely quiet.

Several people came by & we talked a while about my trip & where I was heading. All in all things are going quite well.

We drove 21 miles today. As of now we have covered 316 miles. The mules are doing just great & are still looking good.
