

John's Journey - Day 33

May 3, 2009

Reno, TX

It rained really hard all during the night. Brit doesn't like the rain & definitely the thunder & lightning scare her so she slept at the foot of the bed by my feet. The roof had a small drip over the driver's seat on to the headrest. I'm glad that it wasn't over the bed.

I went out early & fed the mules. It's still raining pretty hard so I'm going to take the day off. It doesn't look like it's going to clear up any time soon.

The mules have a nice place to rest. Maybe the weather will be better tomorrow. I'm still putting medicated salve on both Mack & Jack's necks. This is helping heal the rub spots and they are looking a lot better each day.

A few people stopped by and chatted a while. I appreciated the company. I also got some extra rest myself today. I turned on my laptop and tried to send some pictures, - did not work, tried to open mail, - did not work. I guess I must have a weak signal or something. This computer is giving me fits!

Tomorrow I have a lot of things I need to get done. If I pass a tire shop, I need to get the left front tire replaced. I'm hoping to find a feed store along the way so I can pick up some hay bags. I forgot mine at home in Henry - just a bit far to go back & get them. Hopefully I'll see a Wal-Mart along the way. I need a few things in there as well.

Also Bud Gordon gave me some hay for the mules. I sure did appreciate the stay here & so did the mules.

I pulled several ticks off Brit today. They were really small ones that I have always called seed ticks.

The weather cleared a bit this afternoon - hopefully tomorrow will be better.
